VERSION (20 points sur 60)

'Isn't there a stream somewhere near here?' he whispered.

'That's right, there is a stream. It's at the edge of the next field, actually. There are fish in it, great big ones. You can watch them lying in the pools under the willow¹ trees, waving their tails'.

'It's the Golden Country – almost,' he murmured.

'The Golden Country?'

'It's nothing, really. A landscape I've seen sometimes in a dream'.

'Look!' whispered Julia.

A thrush² had alighted on a bough³ not five metres away, almost at the level of their faces. Perhaps it had not seen them. It was in the sun, they in the shade. It spread out its wings, fitted them carefully into place again, ducked its head for a moment, as though making a sort of obeisance to the sun, and then began to pour forth a torrent of song. In the afternoon hush the volume of sound was startling. Winston and Julia clung together, fascinated. The music went on and on, minute after minute, with astonishing variations, never once repeating itself, almost as though the bird were deliberately showing off its virtuosity. Sometimes it stopped for a few seconds, spread out and resettled its wings, then swelled its speckled breast and again burst into song. Winston watched it with a sort of vague reverence. For whom, for what, was that bird singing? No mate, no rival was watching it. What made it sit at the edge of the lonely wood and pour its music into nothingness? He wondered whether after all there was a microphone hidden somewhere near. He and Julia had spoken only in low whispers, and it would not pick up what they had said, but it would pick up the thrush. Perhaps at the other end of the instrument some small, beetle-like man was listening intently – listening to that. But by degrees the flood of music drove all speculations out of his mind. It was as though it were a kind of liquid stuff that poured all over him and got mixed up with the sunlight that filtered through the leaves.

VERSION :

« N’y a-t-il pas une rivière / un ruisseau près d’ici ? murmura / chuchota-t-il.

- C’est vrai, il y a une rivière. Elle est au bord du champ d’à côté, en fait. On y trouve des poissons, des bien gros. Tu peux les voir dans les bassins sous les saules, frétilant de la queue.
- C’est le pays doré / d’or – ou presque, murmura-t-il.
- Le pays d’or ?
- Ce n’est rien vraiment. Un paysage que j’ai vu en rêve quelquefois.
- Regarde ! murmura Julia. »

Une grive s’était posée sur une branche, à moins de cinq mètres, presque à la hauteur de leurs visages. Peut-être ne les avait-elle pas vus. Elle était au soleil, eux à l’ombre. Elle déploya ses ailes, les replia précautionneusement, rentra sa tête un moment comme en signe d’obéissance au soleil, avant de commencer à déverser / répandre un torrent de chant / chanson. Dans la quiétude de l’après-midi, le volume sonore était impressionnant. Winston et Julia étaient accrochés / agrippés l’un à l’autre, fascinés. La musique continua, minute après minute, variant étonnamment, sans jamais se répéter, comme si l’oiseau montrait / vantait délibérément sa virtuosité. Parfois, il s’arrêtait quelques secondes, étirait puis rangeait / rentra ses ailes, puis gonflait sa poitrine tachetée et reprenait son chant. Winston le regardait avec une sorte de vague respect. Pour qui, pourquoi cet oiseau chantait-il ? Aucun partenaire / compagnon ne le regardait. Quelle raison l’avait poussé à s’asseoir à l’orée de la forêt et déverser son chant dans le vide / néant ? Il se demanda si, après tout, il y avait un microphone caché près d’ici. Lui et Julia n’avaient échangé que des murmures et cela n’aurait pas enregistré ce qu’ils avaient dit, mais cela aurait enregistré la grive. Peut-être qu’à l’autre bout de l’instrument un petit homme ressemblant à un scarabée écoutait attentivement, écoutait cela. Mais, graduellement, le flot de musique chassa / dissipa toute spéculation de son esprit. On aurait dit qu’une espèce de liquide l’avait recouvert et s’était mélangé à la lumière du soleil que filtraient / filtrée par les feuilles.
